

MICHEL DE MONTAIGNE
ESSAYS

Book 1 · Chapter 8

Translation by HyperEssays (2020–24, Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-ShareAlike 4.0 International)
· Last updated on August 24, 2024

HYPERESSAYS is a project to create a modern and accessible online edition of the Essays of Michel de Montaigne. More information at www.hyperessays.net

ESSAYS-1-8-20240824-195512

On Idleness

^a AS WE SEE thousands of wild and useless weeds of all sorts sprouting from untilled land, if it is rich and fertile, and understand that, to make it productive we must reclaim it and use it to sow what is useful to us; and as we see that women can, by themselves, produce clumps and bits of misshapen flesh but that to grow a fine and healthy baby another seed must be planted in them; so it is with minds. If they have no object to busy themselves with, something to check and restrain them, they will run free and ramble through the open field of their imagination.

^b *Sicut aquae tremulum labris ubi lumen ahenis
Sole repressum, aut radiantis imagine Lunae,
Omnia peruolitat late loca, iamque sub auras
Erigitur, summiq; ferit laquearia tecti.*

^a And in this state of excitement, minds will come up with all kinds of foolishness and fantasies,

^a *uelut aegri somnia, uanae
Finguntur species.*

^a A soul with no fixed goal is sure to lose its way for, as they say, to be everywhere is to be nowhere.

^b Quisquis ubique habitat, Maxime, nusquam habitat.

^a When I retired at home recently, I was determined, as much as I could, to stay out of things, and to spend in peace and solitude whatever life I have left to live. I thought I could do my mind no greater favor than to let it be free, to leave it alone, to pause and focus on itself, things I hoped I would be able to do more easily now that I have settled and become more mature. But I find that, on the contrary, uariam semper dant otia mentem and that, like a runaway horse, my mind finds a hundred more roads for itself to race down than it would for someone else. It gives birth to so many chimeras and bizarre monsters, one after the other without order or purpose, that, to appreciate how ridiculous and strange they are, I

Just like sunlight, or the reflection of a bright moon, shimmering in copper basins full of water scatters in all directions and then bounces upward and hits the panels of a tall ceiling. • VERG., AEN., 8.22

Like a sick man's dreams inventing shapeless forms. • HOR., ARS P., 7

Whoever lives everywhere,
Maximus, lives nowhere. • MART.,
7.73

Idleness always gives rise to all kinds of thoughts • LUC., 4.704

have started to keep a list of them with which, in time, I hope to embarrass it.

MONTAIGNE'S SOURCES

Hor., Ars P. Horace, Art of Poetry

Luc. Lucan, Civil War

Mart. Martial, Epigrams

Verg., Aen. Virgil, Aeneid